I think we should take advantage of the recent rally to trim some positions that either have limited upside (like our Barclays Pfds and Citi Pfds) or are at risk for further downside if Europe does not ratify the expanded EFSF.

<= class=MsoNormal>

Recommendation:

- trim our CIT from 10MM to 5MM. Would sell $2.5MM of both the 2016 and the 2017 maturity. We are up on both positions

- collar ½ our MS exposure for 1 month. This would entail buying a 14 put and selling a 17 call. Cost around 10c/share

- collar ½ out Telefnica position for 1 month. 13.50/15 collar. Cashless.</=pan>

I will call you to discuss.

=span style='font-size:11.0pt;font-family:"Calibri","sans-serif"'>Hi Je=frey

We are still doing some more credit work before we close the $5=M Harrah's note.

<=o:p>

Since the end of August the account is down=around $2.7MM (was flat at the end of Aug).This translates into -$6.=8MM for 2010 and +$4.25MM YTD for 2011.

This has been due to (c=anges since End of August):

&nbs=;

SGD down 5% ($500K)

INR down 5% ($500K

- =nbsp; We switched both of these forwards i=to options so we have limited downside from here on out<=p>

CADJPY down 150K [We are long the 83.25 CAD Call and S=ort the 76.00 Put with a knock in at 71; spot at 76.50; knock in=7% away)

Oil call down 140K

Corn down 600K

ING Pfds down 200K

MS Note=knocked in down 140K

Telefonica note =own 300K [Stock is trading below 2009 lows; only 35% of their revenue come= from Spain; would HOLD]

<=o:p>

I would like to reduce further downside.<=:p>

I think the cheapest protection out there remains buying CDS on Asia. For example Indonesia CDS costs 220bps. It got as wide as 1200bps in 2008. It feels like Asian credit spreads remain one of the few things that have not moved and could provide some cheaper tail risk if things deteriorate further.

Financial Pfd's remain our largest notional exposure (around $20MM). I think we should reduce some exposure here. Would involve selling some of JPM, Barclays and Citigroup. BAC and WFC was downgraded today and would also trim those positions.

Do you have time to discuss?

Paul
