Hi Deepak,

Just letting you know we had a group consult with Shaika and have some recommendations to share with the family.

I am working on typing something up and will send to them in the next few days and copy you. We have given them some things to start with, as we discussed, as well as kits for stool testing to get them started on the process for FMT. After further discussion amongst ourselves, given the difficulty in administering FMT to an autistic child, we did feel that they will be best served by going somewhere where they can use mild sedation and administer properly as opposed to mom doing it alone. There are clinics in Europe where it is standard of care and legal to do FMT (as opposed to being illegal here). Christine will be sending me some clinics we can refer them to and I will add to the document I am preparing. We are helping them start the donor and recipient screening process so they can have that done ahead of time.

Let me know if there is anything else you think we should do. </=pan>
