
From: David Gelernter [REDACTED]
Sent: Tuesday, October 6, 2015 2:18 PM
To: Jeffrey Epstein
Subject: from the distant past

Dear Jeff-- I have a son who's successfully maneuvered a tech start-up to a crucial point (just at the start of beta test); he wants & needs advice as he plans his next move, and I can't give him any. I know how busy you are, but I thought I'd start at the top (he had the same thought). Is there any chance he could speak with you on the phone, or stop by briefly? He lives a few blocks from your Frick place.

This weekend I had a piece in the WSJ on a topic we talked about years ago (<http://on.wsj.com/1ONdIRR> <<http://on.wsj.com/1ONdIRR>>). I'd have bet lots that someone would have figured it out by now--putting yr digital stuff in one place, so you can keep an eye on everything--and let software do the work of arranging & finding--you called it a prosthetic memory; but the bigs figure that, given all the money they're making on steam locos, why bother with airplanes? (Or cars, for that matter.) I can't blame them.

Thanks,

David