No, not really. I need answers and closure. I've loved you for a long time, I've been sure about you. Now to be able to get over it and find something else to want, I need your help. I need you to be straightforward and honest because I can't function like this and I have exhausted all other options. Not that they are not fun, but they are not helpful. You told me the truth about Eva, so now tell me about us. I need you to say you know what you are doing. Tell me you don't love me anymore or you just don't love me enough, tell me you found someone else or tell me you want to keep looking because I am just not the girl you want to be with. Anything that means you know. I need you to let me go because I can't do it on my own.

Then you can say Enough improving or saving our relationship. My priorities and intentions were straight and pure. You still focus on the small stuff, errands, cooking and then you end up surrounded by people like Jenna. Makes no sense to me but whatever makes you happy..

means or why you still keep mentioning her. I was not at all focused on her, never even met her.
