Made the rounds this week: surgeon, x-ray, neurologist. Good news: remarkable recovery of strength in my right arm which was the original problem and there were no guarantees it would come back. Neurologist, who was insistent of immediate surgery for the problem at Xmas, now says there's no urgency for the second operation (which I was supposed to have two weeks ago) which was to be a preventative action. Thinks we should wait and keep an eye on things. Seeing surgeon again in two weeks to see how things are going. Feeling better also.
