That wasn't DB offer. It was 1 plus an end year share which may be 3-5.

I think Kleinwort looking more interesting.

Tim says they will have partners and senior advisers, roughly ten of each. You should read the FT article from last week, gives good flavour of the exclusive, investment advisory and asset managing bank they want to build. Tim aims to be the biggest stockholder in ten years time. I could build up my own stock over that time on a lower retention fee than DB but with a possibly clearer (and potentially) bigger deal share at end of year, depending what I bring in. Tim says I am underselling myself to DB at 1m. He says that I will be adding substantial but unquantifiable value to them and this will lead to a difficult end year negotiation. Says Jain is very good but danger of him not hanging around indefinitely cos he'll never get top job. Says they will vacuum out my roladex and the difficulty will be becoming part of deals.

I am attracted by building something and being there at beginning.
