Economic advice provided by IPI and its advisors will focus on the following areas:

- i. Establishing and maintaining a suitable exchange rate regime in the face of likely financial instability and exchange rate fluctuation in Russia.
- ii. Efficiently deploying rapidly growing reserves to maximize financial and political advantages. This poses a particularly challenging problem in a world where returns on industrial country bonds are low and likely to remain low for a protracted period and where geopolitical uncertainty increasingly infects all asset markets.
- iii. Maintaining a multi-vector approach to international economic policy in a world where Russian truculence is increasing, America may be turning inwards and is heading into a government transition period and China is becoming increasingly assertive.
- iv. Assuring full participation in all aspects of the global economic system, and seeking the benefits of partnerships globally while maintaining involvement in the Eurasian Union.
- v. Remaining attractive as a target for foreign investment in the face of regional political instability.

vi. Pursuing a national economic strategy that will maximize economic strength, pro.

prosperity and the capacity to wield global influence.
