i see what you mean, except for lsat and the agency i always did what u think is right jeffrey, because I know how smart and full of best decisions you are... i am not sure i met someone smarter than you in my entire life well i still did postpone lsat from oct to dec...and also understand me, maybe its an argument of a 20 y old student with no job, but still, i paid lots of money for applications, lsat trainings, sure i wanted to try smth i was preparing for 4 months..i was hard to loose money i spent on applications+teachers and just postpone and do nothing except for preparation for the next 12 months.... i have never been loosing money i invested before so i have no experience in it escort mess but what can i do if i needed to earn money to pay the school, and its not 500 a year like in france - my dad was against me coming to Sydney from the very beginning but i insisted so he supported partly... anyway im fired now hopefully will be smart enough to stop doing it, but then i will have to stop this law school too....paris could be great, next step bck to the past jeffrey please dont be mad at me, im still young and stupid learning on my mistakes and trying to get somewhere in this world. i dont have a dad who can get me a job or whose business i can take, so i do myself what i can will try to follow your example, buying plane tickets in NY and selling them in London, ahaha, thats what you told me how you were making your first cash you have repeatedly done the opposite of what i suggested you do. you are old enough to make your own mistakes,, i cannot spend my time and will not,, explaining to you for hours ,, why you shouldn't take the test, and no matter how hard i try ,, you decide against my advice and do the same thing you wanted to do.. I do not have a problem , you are not my girlfriend.. its just a waste of my time and yours, for you to ask over and over again ,, and no matter how hard i try to convince you that you are doing the wrong thing, you do it anyway.. .
