i appreciate it, but feel free to throw out things, as opposed to repair, if you decide, the rooms are disgraceful, the locker area, etc.

I looked at the 3 John Deere Mules in the storage building with Sheridan. 2 of them have fairly minor issues (fuel rail & clutch cable) and the other has a bad transmission. He said that all of the parts have been ordered. He is going to work on straightening it up in there and moving some of the items to the new storage building. It should look a bit better in there today. Definitely what needs to happen, is everything needs to come out, the whole building needs to be pressure washed, floors re-coated and painted top to bottom. When I spoke with the mechanic yesterday, he suggested using that area as a body shop to repair some of the rusted vehicles. If we go this route, I would suggest waiting on the painting and floor coating until the bulk of the body work is completed, otherwise we will have to do it again to cover the overspray.

I d like you to give me an idea of what you need to get this place organized, should we take everything out of storage, clean the rooms and only put back what is operational and clean? this is not my skill set. do you need to hire laborers
