Subject: codes in evolution

Dear Professor Nowak

My name is Michael Segal. I'm editor of Nautilus, a new science and culture magazine. Every month we choose a single theme from contemporary science, and examine it from a variety of perspectives. Our content is highly interdisciplinary, and we aim to draw surprising connections among the pieces we publish.

I'm writing now to ask if you would be interested in writing about your work on evolutionary theory. Your contribution would appear in our issue on "Secret Codes", next to articles on cryptography, textual analysis and so on. We'd ask you walk us through the role of protected information (or codes) inside evolution.

We'd pay $170 per word, and give you four weeks to write.

What do you think?

Best,
Michael
