i don't have how many shares he bought. so lets asssume he bought 1 million shares at 10 dollars . that would be preferred shares that after going public will be convertible into common shares with restrictions, so you can buy the option to buy 1million shares at 11dollars , that would last for three years , if the stock goes to 25 , you would have a contract worth 14 million, dollars , which you could either excericse or sell back to him for a captial gain,

You are the best.
I think that I get it but will call you later.

Tried calling you but it just ring.

I found a solution. very clever jeffrey, you will enter a contract with Bill that he agrees that you can buy shares of common in the future from dec 31 2013 to dec 31 2015 for a fized dollars today. he through bgv only owns preferred, it is convertible but no restrictions exist for common . you can then excercise your right when you want to. its capital gain. BG V is an LLC and i would like to know the owners. but it is immaterial to my suggested transaction.

this also would not require a cascade involvment
