I received no response from you again. I sent you a nice email asking about getting you Devil Dogs. When I talk about you ignoring nice emails, this is what I mean. A few weeks back you did not respond to my asking if I could make you eggplant parmesan, no response to asking if I could bring you anything to LSJ - twice, and no response now.

Emails you reply to are usually not positive. This has been going on for years. You would see a big increase in positive interactions and a less problems across the board, if you just realized how this works. I say this to help you see why there is endless drama around you. There doesn't have to be, but you keep encouraging people to behave badly.

I would appreciate you responding to normal messages, but this is not about me. I don't really need a response about the little things I offer to do for you, but I want to help you understand the consequences of what you are doing. My advice is yours to dismiss...
