Hi Jeffrey,

I am doing well. Another long week flew by. I am getting used to the hours and don't mind working so much. I am pretty excited to go to work.

There are a few exciting things. The main manager picked a group of five promising newcomers to mentor and I am on it. For the month of august the manager (Karla) is tracking our progress, gross fees and marketing. We meet once a week and discuss our challenges and progress made and share ideas on improvement. In an office meeting this week (most agents were present), Karla made an example of all of us and shared our production numbers with the entire office. I brought in about 13,000 gross fees to the company in the month of August.

Another exciting thing is training for sales in the next few months. My manger Marlon picked me and another guy to train for sales out of at least 20 other people. We will start going aggressively after sales listing to get exclusives by approaching the owners. We are getting coaching from real estate coach Tom Ferry via phone conferences. I listed in on the last one.

Today Marlon took us out to lunch and made it clear the he wants to work on sales and rentals with the two of us as a team going into 2011 and that we can produce as much as him (he is a top producer in the firm bring in 30000+ monthly) within a year or so. It's hard to believe but very motivating to aspire to that level.

I rented another apartment today. Finally :) The last one was last Friday.

I officially topped my smith barney wages today. I was getting 2250 a month at smith barney and already received 2500 in August and have about 900 more coming to me next week. :)

What do have to say to that?

I think I rock! Very motivated to keep going and improving.

Kisses
