Sigh probably true but unfortunate reality

I am worried not just on own insecurity

Even though he spends all of his evenings with me (except when i travel) and there is zero evidence of other women anywhere, plus he is very high integrity there are some things that make me worry

He's on SMS (text) quite a lot. I know lots of men and even women he works with but feels weird for him to check so frequently and at night etc Hes started to care more about how he looks, laser hair removal etc.

He is really into yoga and all the female instructors flirt constantly with him. Usually he doesn't notice but he's started to point out more people in class etc

Although he's always been a follower of culture and current events he is constantly googling himself and reading all the stupid tabloid sites.

I have no idea about money BC we have always kept totally separate accounts but his habits haven't really changed. He buys more shoes and yoga clothes

I have never asked him any questions about anything he does. He is very independent as am I.

Not sure what to think? Worried that talking about anything will just annoy him (i never ever have talked about anything since I know that's what drives him nuts about his mom)

My options are really three.

1 Do nothing dont worry and try my best to be me and love him no matter what he does and just ignore everything

2 Ask him in a non threatening way just very frankly if he wants to end the relationship or there is someone else he'd rather be with

3 force a conversation about the future that will make him angry but at least give me a sense of whether or not I should try to fix whatever I can or move on and be miserable without him lately i have been thinking a lot about steve and i.

i'm not getting younger and i want the security of knowing i have someone around for the long term i look around and see a whole bunch of alone women my age or even a little older and it is sad - not as sad when they have children to keep them company (or maybe worse?) they sort of spent their best years with one person and then got dumped, usually they are super surprised by it i have been with steve nearly 13 years worried that he will soon decide to move on and that would be devastating for me since i have built my world around him there is nothing driving a decision to stay or go in any way and as best i can tell things seem to be great i adore him and have immeasurable respect for him i have never cheated on him not sure what to do?

every year as time passes i realize that i am way past my "sell by" date i have no desire to be with anyone else but i worry that it could happen at any minute
