The streams field is still wide open, b/c no big player understands that you get power by simplifying & not complexifying, adding features. Maybe we've got 1.5 years, or 2 or 5. Google is now as aggressive as Apple in doing stream things. Anyway, the opening is there.

BTW, iCloud is irrelevant to the Pros Memory; our stream is for realtime messaging & has a future -- i.e. it's not just an archive; it has flip-through or audio browsing, private vs public tab etc.

iCloud follows Apple's "time machine" (& there's more similar stuff in Lion, the new Mac OS). Time Machine was one of the three Apple systems alleged to infringe our patents. Jury agreed (& found deliberate infringement); judge ruled that, although the infringing systems were there, we hadn't proved that anyone actually used them.

Betting is that jury verdict will be re-instated (why Boies & the rest agreed to do the appeal): infringement is obvious -- tho no one knows about damages.
