i think both would look good.. but if we do the distance between lines twice larger, means 16 inches, then the flat square we get would have the same size like the tile..
twice smaller would be 4 inches flat square..

i think in the room i did on 5th floor on 71st st, the lines are 5.5 inches wide and 2 feet in the between.
maybe if we do 8 inch wide with two feet in the between would look good. somehow the same square like on the fifth floor but with the lines a little wider.

i didnt do a sample..it would be same like the room on fifth floor 71st st. but not in diagonal.. horizontal and vertical and wider lines(16 inch)

hi jeffrey,

..so for the relax room I will do white on white venetian plaster vertical and horizontal lines. we discussed in new york

about making the lines wider. the relax room has tiles on the floor and one tile is 16X16 inches, so I was thinking to follow the floor lines up on the wall so those vertical and horizontal lines I will do on the wall will be 16 inches wide with a distance between them by 16 inches. so we will have somehow the same squares on the wall like on the floor.

so what do you think about this?

thank you,
ion
