i agree. Terrible thing to be entitled about feeling too. Since I'm neither peaceful nor satisfied by default, I would say: "well-fed". I read Vicky's piece about you in VF. I would say that article is more psychologically telling of her than you. I couldn't finish it -- it was too grating and grasping -- but most writers write about what they know. I don't mean subject matter, I mean the things they live with: their own fears, desires, shame, lies, anxieties, shortcomings. The themes of the piece are themes she knows very well from her own life. But you probably knew that and I know it's not helpful.

there is no good word in chinese for happy. it is fulfilled, satisfied, peaceful,, well fed. etc. happy is too fleeting and cheap

I'm trying not to interact with anyone so I can preserve the feeling. I think it is what people call happiness?
