The fun "activities" (such as the wine tasting, flash pickling, academy screeners, Murray leading a game of Diplomacy, etc.) are entirely separate from our day intense conference discussions, which will be on serious topics related to your specific interests. The fun activities are at night, all at the hotel, will be lots of fun. It's just a break from the intense sessions during the day, and people can play and do things that are interesting and unusual. My educational project got funded by one of the microsoft billionaires, who wanted to take it and turn it into a massive on-line business. He loved it, and the general reaction to it has been overwhelmingly positive, and I heard that it submitted for two educational prizes as well. Now, preparing five talks for Davos, and am also going to Israel for a week to help them with their new science museum. They liked that illusory contour sculpture that I showed you, but I am going to make an illusory contour sculpture in the form of the Star of David.

I really tried hard to make this weekend enjoyable and fun for YOU! I saw Pablos the other day when I was up in Seattle, and he knows the people you don't, and said it was an absolutely awesome kick-ass group. The assembled are smart, fun, and characters. Not just some stiff and dull ivory tower academic types. There is no wallpaper.
