Well, in nutshell, F is about to be fired and I am trying desperately to convince him to write a resignation letter stating the positive new demand on his career elsewhere and the failing health of his Parents. Some jealous girls in the orchestra are bringing him down and the general manager is afraid of scandal. F wants to get a lawyer and fight their accusations and gossips, which I am certain will ruin his career elsewhere and he doesn't have $ to fight. He is waiting with some false hope that the news in two days will be good. It will not. I am certain. All signs point the same way. So resign with good reasons or be fired. I wrote a really good letter I could send you to look at. Sorry to bother you but he's a genius and a naïve on
