Dear Madam

Unlawful Content

We write further to your letter of 30 November 2007.

The copyright in the "Northern Rock Executive Summary" (the "Work") is owned by our client, Northern Rock plc. There is no requirement for copyright registration in the United Kingdom. As the United States is a signatory of the Berne Convention and the WIPO Copyright Treaty, our client's copyright is recognised in the United States.

We have already explained that we act for the copyright owner of the Work. Consequently, there can be no justification for your client's failure to remove the Work from its website. We re-iterate that publication must be immediately suspended and require your confirmation by no later than 9am UK time, Thursday 13 December 2007 that the Work has been removed from your client's site.

In the absence of such confirmation, please confirm that you are authorised to accept service of proceedings on your client's behalf.

On a separate point, so that we can consider your request for copies of the Orders of 13 and 22 November 2007 and in view of your client's policy of mass document leaking, please confirm that your client's English legal advisers will provide a written undertaking that the Orders will only be used for the purpose of obtaining legal advice and shall not be provided to your client without our client's written approval or published in any way by your client.

Finally, legal correspondence is self evidently confidential and legally privileged as between the parties and must not be published without our written consent (which is expressly not provided in this instance). In addition to the breach of confidence this would constitute, it would of course amount to an infringement of our copyright.

Yours faithfully
